Chapter 201: The Expansion of the Inner Realms

Sung Jin-Woo, now far beyond the limits of mortal comprehension, made his next bold move. With the multiverse at peace, he turned his focus inward. His power had reached an unimaginable height, but he knew that the creation and control of reality itself required more than mere force—it required an intricate network of influence, spread across countless dimensions.

The Creation of 100,000 Clones

In a single, swift motion, Sung Jin-Woo generated 100,000 new clones, each imbued with 0.00000000001% of his immense strength. These clones were not mere reflections of his being—they were reflections of his will, each capable of independent thought, action, and creation. Though their power was fractional compared to his true form, they were still gods in their own right, wielding abilities far beyond the scope of mortal comprehension.

These new clones would serve as the architects of the future. They were entrusted with shaping and cultivating the infinite worlds within the fabric of Sung Jin-Woo's essence. Their task was monumental: they would create and manage seven-layered inner worlds, each a miniature multiverse unto itself, where the laws of reality could be bent, shaped, and perfected.

The Inner Worlds of Sung Jin-Woo’s Original Body

The 100,000 clones were not scattered throughout the multiverse. Instead, they were placed into 100,000 inner worlds, which had been forged within Sung Jin-Woo’s original body. These worlds existed in the depths of his being, a realm of boundless space where time flowed differently, and the laws of reality could be rewritten at will.

Each inner world was designed with a specific purpose: to house one clone and grant them the autonomy to shape their universe. The time dilation within these worlds was immense—one second in the outer world equaled one full year inside the inner worlds. This allowed the clones to work tirelessly for eons, creating the seven-layered realms and the Lesser Absolutes that would govern them.

The Seven-Layered Inner Worlds

Each clone was tasked with the creation of a seven-layered inner world, a domain that would extend the reach of Sung Jin-Woo’s influence across the fabric of the multiverse. Within each layer, the clone would craft and refine the laws of reality, bending them to their will. The Lesser Absolutes, powerful entities created by the clones, would serve as overseers and rulers of each layer. Their strength was not to be underestimated, for they were born of the very essence of Sung Jin-Woo’s power.

As the clones moved through the process of creation, they built armies of immense strength, capable of defending and expanding their worlds. The time dilation within each layer of the inner world was even more pronounced—one second in the outer world equaled one million years inside the seven-layered worlds. This allowed for the rapid growth of civilizations, the rise of armies, and the cultivation of power on a scale that surpassed even the gods of old.

The First Seven Clones: Deployed to Guard and Expand the Realms

While the 100,000 clones labored within their worlds, the first seven clones were deployed across the multiverse, each given a unique mission that would ensure the continued stability and growth of the realms.

1. First Clone: Deployed to the Abyss, the clone would guard this domain, ensuring that no remnants of the Constellations or other threats would emerge to disturb the peace.

2. Second Clone: Deployed to Earth, this clone would ensure that the human realm remained untouched by the cosmic powers, fostering a future where humanity could thrive in harmony.

3. Third Clone: Sent to the Shadowverse domain of Shadowkins, this clone would maintain order and stability among the Shadowkin forces, preventing any rebellion or disturbance in the realm.

4. Fourth Clone: Assigned to the Shadow Abyss, the clone would oversee the domain of the Shadow Lords, ensuring that the shadow armies remained loyal and their influence unchecked.

5. Fifth Clone: Deployed to the Sung Dynasty, the clone would monitor the affairs of the Dynasty, ensuring the protection of the legacy and guiding it toward its inevitable future.

6. Sixth Clone: Sent to the domain of Heavenly Soldiers, this clone would ensure the forces of the heavenly army remained disciplined and focused on maintaining the balance of the multiverse.

7. Seventh Clone: Tasked with overseeing the domain of the Dark Apostles, this clone would prevent any rogue factions from rising within their ranks and disrupting the dark powers at play.

The Infinite Expansion of the Shadow Sovereign’s Reach

With the deployment of these 100,000 clones and the establishment of countless seven-layered inner worlds, Sung Jin-Woo’s influence stretched beyond the known multiverse. His power was no longer confined to a single being or a single realm. It extended across the fabric of existence itself, shaping the destiny of countless worlds and the beings that inhabited them.

The work had only just begun. For every new layer, for every new clone, Sung Jin-Woo's reach grew exponentially. Each inner world, each Lesser Absolute, and each army created was another building block in his ever-expanding empire. In time, these worlds would become the foundation of an even greater existence—a new reality that would surpass all that had come before.

As Sung Jin-Woo sat upon his Throne of Shadows, he reflected on the path he had chosen. The multiverse was vast, and its potential was limitless. With his clones working tirelessly within the confines of his being and beyond, he would shape a future of absolute order, stability, and transcendence. The Shadow Sovereign's reign had only just begun.
